

The Louis-Schmeling Fight

Professional boxing was among the few integrated sports in the United States, and prizefighter Joe Louis was a hero to American Blacks. On June 19 1936, after rain postponed the fight a day, the undefeated Louis was knocked out by Germany's Max Schmeling.

German Minister of Propaganda Joseph Goebbels proclaimed Schmeling's victory a triumph for Germany and Hitlerism. The Nazi weekly journal Das Schwarze Korps (The Black Corps) commented: "Schmeling's victory was not only a sport. It was a question of prestige for our race." In a 1938 rematch, Louis defeated Schmeling in one round.

Schmeling, who was never a Nazi, was warmly received by Hitler, UPI/Corbis—Bettmann.

This tribute to Louis after his defeat appeared in The Pittsburgh Courier, June 27, 1936.

JIM CROW AMERICAN

"Jim Crow" laws barred African Americans from access to employment and to public places such as restaurants, hotels, and other facilities. In the South especially, Blacks lived in fear of racially motivated violence.
